

Universitätsbibliothek Paderborn

Remarks On The Life and Writings Of Dr. Jonathan Swift, Dean of St. Patrick's, Dublin

Orrery, John Boyle of

London, 1752

A quotation from Virgil relating to Anchises.

urn:nbn:de:hbz:466:1-49109

Visual Library

AND WRITINGS OF DR. SWIFT. 205

But before I quit this subject, give me leave to own how fenfibly I felt the force of an arrow directed from his hand. The wound, I believe, was not defigned to be lasting. It was given in a passion, and upon an extraordinary occasion : but afterwards he was fo defirous to heal it, by a return of the greatest degree of friendfhip and affection, that he had directed the remaining fear to be entirely erafed, when his unexpected and too fudden death prevented the completion of his kind intentions, and the perfection of my cure. With difficulty I furvived the fhock. As it was not in my power to avoid the fevere decree, I obeyed : and, by my obedience, have flattered myfelf, that I fubmitted to the will of heaven. However, I have fince thought, that I could not offer a more grateful facrifice to his manes, than by exerting those faculties, which he had, at first, cultivated with fo much care; and had deprefied, at last, perhaps only to raife them higher. Oh my fon ! how often have I reflected upon the happinels of ÆNEAS, in hearing the ghoft of ANCHISES fay, Sic equidem ducebam animo rebarque futurum, Tempora dinumerans: nec me mea cura fefellit!

The name of my honoured father has infenfibly drawn me into this digreffion, which, to fpeak the truth, I look upon as due to his memory, to my own fentiments, and to your filial tendernefs.

The Fragment, or a Discourse concerning the mechanical operation of the Spirit, is a fatyr against enthusiasm, and those